Scenic Boat Ride on the Western Bays of Long Island's South Shore

Meet and talk with canal residents and parks workers from Freeport to Long Beach, and how we coped with Superstorm Sandy

In the western bays of Long Island's south shore Superstorm Sandy damaged thousands of local homes and canals, some of which were built in the 1920s when the south shore was first developed. Come aboard as we hear from local residents who were displaced, and how parks and public workers coped in the aftermath. Featured presenters include Long Beach historian Doug Sheer, former Jones Beach Superintendent Sue Guiliani, and Freeport residents Al and Artie Grover.
